

The RIAA and MPAA are attempting to limit use of media to copy and backup data. They are also attempting to infringe on fair use. I want the freedom to back up my data without paying these pirates fees for backup media because they have lobbyists, money and influence. They have their rights to copyright but these should not over-ride the rights of the public.

These groups have attempted to bribe (make campaign contributions) to congressmen to vote for a special privilege to break into any computer including those of government agencies to look for copyrighted material and be absolved from corrupting the owners data and hard drives. By no means, should these types of people or CEO's be allowed special consideration to limit the rights of the public. Instead, these people need a much closer look by law enforcement agencies, period!
